Stanley Wrice, Wrongfully Convicted Man, Released From Prison After 30 Years

During his more than 30 years behind bars, Stanley Wrice insisted he was innocent, that Chicago police had beat him until he confessed to a rape he didn't commit. On Wednesday, he walked out of an Illinois prison a free man, thanks to a judge's order that served as a reminder that one of the darkest chapters in the city's history is far from over. Wrice, who was sentenced to 100 years behind bars for a 1982 sexual assault, is among more than two dozen inmates — most of them black men Wrice, now 57, claim he confessed only after being tortured by officers. Wrice's case went all the way to the Illinois Supreme Court before he got that hearing. But it marked a major victory for other inmates and former inmates, because the courts said that no matter what other evidence authorities have against a defendant, a coerced confession could never be dismissed as "harmless error."

That means that if such a ruling is made, a case must return to the trial court, as was Wrice's, for a hearing. "Clearly the fact that Stanley has been granted a new trial underscores the importance of the class-action petition and I think it strengthens our argument," said Bowman, who is also director of the Roderick MacArthur Justice Center. Is expected to be released from prison as he waits for a new trial on rape charges.

Exonerated prisoners started nonprofit detective agency to free other innocent inmates.

After serving almost 13 years of a Texas life sentence, Christopher Scott was exonerated of murder after another suspect in the case confessed to the crime in 2009.

"I think it's the first time I actually cried, when [my lawyer] told me I had a million-to-one chance to make it," Scott said. "I went back to him the next day and I told him, 'You gave me a million-to-one chance to make it. I'm going to be that one out of the million.'"

Scott, now owner of his own men's apparel store, Christopher's Men's Wear, has united with dozens of other exonerated former prisoners in Dallas County to launch the House of Renewed Hope, a nonprofit amateur detective agency that helps free wrongfully convicted inmates. He focuses mainly on cases like his, in which there is no DNA evidence to disprove the conviction. The House of Renewed Hope also lobbies Texas legislators for greater compensation for ex-inmates who have been exonerated and increased access to public services, including health care.

A Sermon from the Director of New Life Evangelistic Center

GOD LOVES YOU

Dear Friends,

God's special message to you at this hour is, "I love you." For many who have been brought up in the church or religious families the response may be a big yawn and the phrase, "what else is new." They may have heard over and over that God loves them but because they have not received this message in the depths of their soul, life has taken the form of one disaster after another. As a result passages like John 3:16 seem to apply to the rest of the world but not to us in the midst of our present problems.

It's a fact God wants us to be a part of His family. He desires that so much that He sent His Son into the world to die for our sins which have prevented us from accepting in the core of our being the reality of His love. God desires for us to depend on Him, rely on Him, lean on Him, love Him and let Him love us. Right now in those areas of our life where it seems everything is crumbling into the valley of hopeless God who is love, wants us to reach out to Him in prayer, trusting that He will meet our needs. "Hope does not disappoint us, because God has poured out His love into our hearts by the Holy Spirit, whom He has given us... God demonstrates His own love for us in this: While we were still sinners, Christ died for us" (Romans 5:5, 8).

For those who felt they have never experienced the fullness of the love of their father or mother He is now saying, "You are the apple of my eye. The one I desire to hide in the shadows of my wings of love" (see Ps.17:8). That craving, longing and desire in your heart to be loved is a desire placed there by God. God can only fill this desire.

Everyday God does so many things for us and we don't even recognize it as a manifestation of His love. Take for example the rising of the sun. If it did not rise after a few days all life as we know it would start to die on planet earth. God has the sunrise each day for you. But even more important than that He had His Son die on that cross for you in order that the full price of your sins might be paid for. As we accept the fact presented in Romans 5:8 that "while we were still sinners, Christ died for us," life as we now know it will change. Oh the liberty that awaits us, from all in life that is wearing us down and out, once we also are convinced as Paul was of God's love. He declared, "in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him who loved us. For I am convinced that neither death nor life, neither angels nor demons, neither the present nor the future, nor any powers, neither height nor depth, nor anything else in all creation, will be able to separate us from the love of God that is in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Romans 8:37-39).

Now don't be afraid to step out in faith. God's love is setting you free from fear and condemnation and He is giving you the ability to love. Determine in your heart that you are going to spread that love. Make it your business to be friendly to others. Smile. God is working through you. Stop making excuses for being so grouchy, complaining and demanding. Let the love of God flow. He wants to use you in ways that He can't use any other creatures on earth. There are people only you can minister His love to. Ask Him to show you how to do it. Spend time with the Lord daily praying, reading the Bible, and observing creation. Let His love flow in you and through you. Just let God love you as you enter into His rest that He has everything under control and will take care of you.

Yours in Christ,

Larry Rice

Sunrise

There was a magnificent sunrise this morning, but I was too busy to enjoy it. I turned away and became preoccupied with other things. I thought about that sunrise a few moments ago, and I realized I lost an opportunity for worship this morning.

In the midst of the busyness and stresses of our days, there are patches of beauty all around us, glimpses of God's goodness that we catch here and there along the way. These are the places in the walls of the universe where heaven is breaking through – If only we will take the time to stop and to reflect upon God's love for us.

What if Moses had taken only a fleeting glance at the bush that was burning but “was not consumed”? What if he had ignored it and hurried on to other things? (He had those sheep to take care of you know, and important work to do.) He would have missed an epic, life changing encounter with the living God.

Sometimes in life we must hurry, but overall life should be less hurrying and more noticing. Life is the present. Life is being aware; it is seeing God's love breaking through. It is turning aside to the miracle or something like a sunrise. Something transitory, yet symbolic of the eternity that awaits us.

Brighten My Day!

Love In A World Full Of Hate

You are the one I come to when no one else can make me smile.

You the one who makes me being me worth while.

You're my rock I stand on when the tide comes in.

You're the rainbow that shines after a bad storm has blown its strong winds, reminding me that everything will be ok in the end.

You're the one I can count on when I need to vent.

True feeling like you were heaven sent, your arms spread out wide willing to shelter me when I need to hide.

Always telling me its ok to cry and to spread my wings and fly, lifting my dreams and hopes up on high.

You always tell me to never give up even when life gets rough, to keep my chin up because you know I'm tough.

You say life is hard and isn't easy but to spend it laughing, smiling, and teasing.

You say to show love not hate and everyday will be great.

As you stand aside and wait to give me love and banish all the hate that this world can create.

Then I thank God for showing me love in a world full of hate.

Little-Known Health Act Fact: Prison Inmates Are Signing Up

President Obama's Affordable Care Act, jails and prisons around the country are beginning to sign up inmates for health insurance

That inmates who are enrolled in Medicaid while in jail or prison can have coverage after they get out.

under the law, taking advantage of the expansion of Medicaid that allows states to extend coverage to single and childless adults — a major part of the prison population.

State and counties are enrolling inmates for two main reasons. Although Medicaid does not cover standard health care for inmates, it can pay for their hospital stays beyond 24 hours — meaning states can transfer millions of dollars of obligations to the federal government.

But the most important benefit of the program, corrections officials say, is that inmates who are enrolled in Medicaid while in jail or prison can have coverage after they get out. People coming out of jail or prison have disproportionately high rates of chronic diseases, especially mental illness and addictive disorders. Few, however, have insurance, and many would qualify for Medicaid under the income test for the program — 138 percent of the poverty line — in the 25 states that have elected to expand their programs. In Chicago, inmates at the Cook County Jail are being enrolled in Medicaid under the health care law as part of the intake process after they are arrested; the county has submitted more than 4,000 applications for inmates since Jan. 1.

In Colorado, state prisoners are being signed up when they need extended hospitalization; 93 applications for inmates and 149 for parolees have been submitted so far.

In the Portland area, more than 1,200 inmates have been enrolled through the state exchange, Cover Oregon, while Delaware and Illinois expect to start soon.

In the past, states and counties have paid for almost all the health care services provided to jail and prison inmates, who are guaranteed such care under the Eighth Amendment.

Without health coverage, inmates leave prison with 30 days' worth of medication and are then mostly left to their own devices. It costs far more to keep an inmate in prison than to provide treatment outside.

Opponents of the Affordable Care Act say that expanding Medicaid has further burdened an already overburdened program, and that allowing enrollment of inmates only worsens the problem. They also contend that while shifting inmate health care costs to the federal government may help states' budgets, it will deepen the federal deficit. And they assert that allowing newly released inmates to receive Medicaid could present new public relations problems for the Affordable Care Act.

Where's The Justice

Michael Brown, killed by a police officer in Ferguson, Mo. The week has brought a teenager's death, protests, looting, clashes with police, the national spotlight and a nationwide uprising, not to mention deep questions about race and justice in America.

An independent autopsy determined that 18-year-old Michael Brown was shot at least six times, including twice in the head, according to the family's attorneys and hired pathologists. Brown was unarmed when he was shot by a police officer Aug. 9 in Ferguson. Witnesses have said Brown had his hands raised above his head when he was repeatedly shot in a street in Ferguson, where the death has heightened racial tensions between the predominantly black community and the mostly white police department.

Authorities said there was a struggle over an officer's weapon, though witnesses have disputed that account.

A grand jury could begin hearing evidence Wednesday to determine whether the officer, Darren Wilson, should be charged in Brown's death, but it's unclear how long it may take, said Ed Magee, spokesman for St. Louis County's prosecuting attorney.

Success Story Kurt Skinner

Of Eaton Rapids, Michigan knows a lot about prison life, having spent three and a half years incarcerated in North Carolina for drug trafficking offenses. He sold pot, acid and cocaine and has the colorful stories to prove it. Once he managed a trip on a Greyhound bus, for instance, with drugs hidden in his boots. Today, Skinner credits his prison years for what has been perhaps his greatest blessing - finding God and the strength to turn his life around. Waiting to be sentenced, he happened to have a short conversation with another inmate, a conversation that "planted a seed" in his soul that eventually blossomed into a new way of living.

"Prison is a miserable life," Skinner said, "(but) I don't carry that with me (anymore)," adding that after giving his life to Christ, he began studying and working to help others. Today Skinner has finished a training course at a local prison ministry, and spends a good chunk of his time volunteering there. He now has a stable family life with his wife, Danielle, and two young sons and has made the Eaton Rapids Wesleyan Church his home. "I'm at the most peace I've ever been in my life."

Life After Hitting Bottom

Some bad things happened to me when I was a young child that I allowed to affect my life. My uncles used to get me drunk for their own amusement and my babysitter's boyfriend physically abused me. Mainly it was the verbal abuse though... "You're no good," or "You'll never amount to anything..."

On the other hand, good things happened in my life when I was approximately five or six years old (Eph. 1:3-5):

Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ: According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love: Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will (KJV).

I knew somehow God loved me and at that moment told him how I loved him. I got baptized as an infant, went to church every Sunday, received first Communion, then Confirmation. My actions didn't show my love. I started drinking, smoking, and getting high at a very young age.

I continued this lifestyle and in the process I was divorced twice and lost five beautiful children—all because of my selfishness. It seemed as if I had to live out the "good for nothing", "never amount to anything" person I was told that I was.

I was in and out of jail for drinking or small amounts of drugs, but never repented of this lifestyle. I woke up from one of my many blackouts to a living nightmare. I committed a horrible crime. I hit bottom is what they call it in Alcoholics Anonymous.

I decided to repent. I laid on a concrete floor crying, praying, and asking for forgiveness. The Holy Spirit came upon me and gave me the comfort I needed. Then came my court sentence...

They were not so forgiving. In Matthew 4:10 it is written, "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and him only shalt thou serve."

I wasn't doing this with my life. I started reading my Bible (a first in my life), took Bible studies via mail, and attended services. This strengthened me enough that years later I had the confidence to take a trade program. I excelled in there, became a tutor, and then a greenhouse technician for eight years.

Genesis 50:20: "But as for you, ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive" (KJV).

My confidence level has changed quite a bit thanks to the Bible. I consider it my "Chilton's Manual" for my spirit man.

Two of my favorite feelings are to be in Christ and win someone over to his kingdom. The other is to bring a Prodigal Son (like me) back to his goodness. Oh, can't forget praise and worship time either. After all, this is why we were created.

EX-FELONS FIND SUCCESS WITH RE-ENTRY PROGRAM

When Raynard Reaves left the North Carolina prison system last year after 32 years behind bars, he left with a bus ticket and the clothes on his back. But he also had something less tangible, something unavailable to most of North Carolina's prison population: A support system provided by Winston-Salem's Project Re-entry.

Now he's a success story, a family man and productive employee with 15 unblemished months of freedom.

The man he is today is a far cry from the 19-year-old heroin addict who committed armed robbery and landed in Raleigh's Central Prison, a maximum-security institution notorious for its tough inmate population.

Reaves said he credits Project Re entry for much of his success on the outside. The program starts inside prison with a 12-week curriculum of life skills classes. Once they've been released, ex-prisoners who've successfully completed the 12-week pre-release program are eligible to receive services and employment on the outside. It's the only pre- to post release re-entry program in North Carolina and serves nine facilities including the Forsyth and Guilford correctional centers.

Project Re-entry counselors also administer vocational and personality assessments to better match participants with suitable jobs. In addition to providing nuts-and bolts guidance on things like résumé writing and interview technique, the instructors give presentations on self esteem and behavior management. One thing Project Re-entry doesn't do is contract with employers for work. Instead, the organization, which is administered by the NC Criminal Justice Department through the Northwest Piedmont Council of Governments and Goodwill Industries, advocates for its clients, who might otherwise be disadvantaged because of their criminal histories.

Florida prisons struggling with extra costs of a hearty appetite for religion

Florida is now under a court order to begin serving kosher food to eligible inmates, a routine and court-tested practice in most states. But state prison officials expressed alarm recently over the surge in prisoners, many of them gentiles, who have stated an interest in going kosher. Their concern: The cost of religious meals is four times as much as the standard fare. Kosher food in prisons has long served as fodder for lawsuits around the country, with most courts coming down firmly on the side of inmates. As long as inmates say they hold a sincere belief in Judaism — a deeply forgiving standard — they are entitled to kosher meals, even if takes a little chutzpah to make the request. Last April, facing an inmate lawsuit, Florida began a pilot program for the religious diet at Union Correctional Facility near Jacksonville. Initially, some 250 inmates signed up, Mr. Crews said. But once other inmates spied the individually boxed lunches, 863 expressed a sudden interest in keeping kosher.... The courts steer clear of that perilous debate. Instead, inmates need only say they have a "sincerely held" religious belief. Some states, like New York, do nothing to try to discern who is feigning Jewishness. In California, inmates talk with a rabbi who will gauge, very generally, a prisoner's actual interest.

Why?

Hello my name is Emma and I am a fifty year old woman who has gone through a lot of trials and tribulations in my life. The most devastating event that I ever had to deal with was the murder of my one and only son in 2007.

I watch the sun rise in the sky
 I ask God the question, Why?
 Why is there hatred in the world?
 Why are there starving boys and girls?
 Why is there addiction everywhere?
 Why are there people not willing to share?
 Why is there prejudice and fear?
 Why are there people not willing to be near?
 I say, God please tell me why.
 Then he whispers me a simple reply,
 You must experience bad to know the good

You must do right just as you know you should
 You must love me, yourself, and everyone
 You must spread hope, faith, and love until your life is done
 You must do unto others as you want them to do to you
 You must persevere in all you do
 All these things you must embrace
 And God assures, everything else will fall into place.

The Cell

Come in and take a seat, at long last we get to meet.

I know that you are here for committing a crime, so lets you and me do some time.

I've got some things I'd like to say, I will see you change from day to day.

The thoughts you will have, the things you will feel, I will be here for your every meal.

You will feel some sadness and you will feel alone at night, you will say "I wish that I were home", make the best of the time you've got,

and let's hope that it's not a lot.

One day we will part, yes, you and me,
 that is the day they set you free.

I'm sure you want to know my name, it hasn't changed, and it's still the same.
 We are both together in this man made hell.

Glad to meet you, I'm your prison cell.

Poem By: Jake Wilson

Again Lord

I have looked away from You Lord
 again
 Lord let me look upon You
 again
 I have walked away from You
 again
 Lord let me walk with You
 again
 I have not read Your Word
 again
 Lord give me a hunger for Your Word
 again
 I have lost my faith in You again

again
 Lord give me faith to trust You
 again
 I have disappointed You Lord
 again
 Lord strengthen me so I will not disappoint You
 again
 Free me Lord from this circle, grant me the victory found within You, in the power of Jesus Christ's blood.
 for always..

Amen!

TERRY LEE FRAZIER TESTIMONY

I am a Born Again Christian. I am a fourth timer doing two years for spousal abuse and one year parole violation. I'll not glorify the sin and my crime by describing all the details. Suffice it to say I was wrongly accusing my mate of infidelity, and came home from work after drinking and making up my mind she was "messing around" with our host. An argument ensued. I struck her, beat on him; the police were there next I knew. As I was intoxicated, and full of rage, pain, and mixed emotion, I went and met the police with destruction (self) in mind. We fought. I was subdued and placed in county jail because of my state of mind and [my] actions were violent. It took them two days to book me in and me to realize not only was I in serious trouble with the law, I ruined our relationship and terrorized my loving woman and two young boys. Well, let me tell you all, when I really realized what I had wrecked, and the feelings I had hurt, and the wrong attitude and image I had displayed to two young boys, let me tell you I was totally emotionally despondent, in internal turmoil, and inconsolable inside. I hated myself with a passion, harbored serious doubts of ever being redeemable socially for anything ever, and commenced plans of suicide through someone else's hands, as I knew I couldn't pull the trigger myself. I also knew I could push someone else's buttons till they did. I won't elaborate how, but believe this, it was very devious and would of worked to the desired end (my death) had not God, Praise His name, and a desperate talk with God, changed my life. I was at the end of my planning stage. All that was left was to initiate the wheels in motion. But before this was done I talked to God first. I told God, "God, I'm in trouble now! I need You to help me. I need you to change me, Father. To make me what you want me to be, 'cause if you don't, I'm gonna start doing the Devil's work. I won't worship him, but I'll be doing his work and don't really see no difference, so please God, come into my heart and make me what you want, cause I don't want to do what I'm thinking, but I can't take the hurt inside." Let me tell you all, God hears a repentant heart, because first thing I know is tears of release began to flow from my eyes like I'm full of water. I don't know how long I cried, but brothers and sisters, I needed that release. I was saved, Hallelujah! God gave me His peace... [beyond] understanding. He took those thoughts of self destruction and put love in its place. In fact, I was so full of peace, and the Holy Spirit, I was feeling more than a tad guilty, and relieved. First relief, and then joy of the Lord as all my burdens were lifted from [me] by the precious love of God. And guilty because I was so full of the joy of the Lord, and the lady I love was not feeling the Lord's love and

joy. I had hurt her terribly, treated her wrongly, and unjustly accused her of wrong doing, and left her alone by being in jail. I didn't know what to do! But I did know to pray and so I did. I wrote her and prayed, and wrote her and prayed, and on and on. I told her of my accepting Jesus in my heart and inside I was no longer the same man. I shared with her the things God shared with me in my heart and kept telling her to give her life 'back' to Christ. I told Sherre God is the answer. He will see us through all. Well, one day I called my boss' house and they asked if I wanted to talk to Sherre! Boy howdy, did I! Anyway, we talked. She told me she still loved me and was very hurt. She was even gracious enough to tell me if this was what it took for me to get right with God, then it was worth it. (That's some kind of loving heart!!) Well, I study the Bible first thing when I wake and last thing before sleep. Praise God, here we have Bible Study two times a week.

Beans & Potatoes

Every day that I've been in prison we've had beans and potatoes for dinner. Day in and day out: day after day beans and potatoes. Days, weeks, months, and years pass by. A man gets tired of beans and potatoes, it gets so that you can't even stand to look at beans and potatoes and the very smell of them is enough to irritate you. I sit at the table and stare down at the food upon my plate and wonder about the whole process that brought them to me.

A tiny little seed grew and become food. A farmer and his workers tilled and labored the earth, the rain, and the sun performed there miracle. Planes, trains, and automobiles transported the crop. Workers inspected, cleaned, and processed the crop for sale to the public. A portion of the crop was transported, this time to a penitentiary, where prisoners cooked, prepared, and then served the meal on to the plate. How many lives have been affected by these beans and potatoes? Hundreds? Thousands?

Then I remember that 65% of the people on this earth are suffering from some form of malnutrition and that every seven seconds somebody somewhere will die from starvation. I think about those poor suffering human beings starving all over the world and then stare down at my beans and potatoes. How very spoiled and ungrateful I am. There on my plate, in those beans and potatoes, are precious calories, carbs, protein, vitamins, minerals, and nutrients.

Life, I am blessed!

To Cope

Permeating into my mind is set the thoughts I would rather forget but these block walls will never cease to keep my mind from finding peace my brain soon sing to atrophy from lack of use and drollery and here I slowly deteriorate in a state that love to incarcerate eight by twelve my little cell is by itself my personal hell made of concrete, block and steel devoid of life, yet so surreal with every step I feel the pain of guilt, regret both so mundane still handing on to a ray of hope that somehow something might help me cope.
